

Our vision is to create new common spaces where everybody can find opportunities to have a good life quality through open green areas, new facilities and a different way to live the city.

Our vision is an OTHER JUNCTION

Berea station. Every day thousands of people concentrate here; formal as well as informal trade take part in an economic cycle closely linked to mobility. The markets produce customers, customers use transport means, drivers use informal traders' service. This is a mechanism where each element depends on the other. The proposal is to use one of the railway tracks and to create a Rail-Bus service by putting small stations between Durban Station and Dalbridge Station. In this way, instead of a congested place our idea aim at develop intermodal micro-hubs encouraging the use of electric means as well as slow mobility. Our aim is to have a tidier and pleasant city by rethinking and projecting new pedestrian green areas and cycling paths. Berea Station congestion relieving allows a general re-qualification policy of the whole area. Brook Street Edge is a medium scale interface of the strategy, for there are all the above said components. Actually, it is an area functioning as a hinge between a very chaotic place like the station and the market and a very silent and spiritual place like the cemetery. By keeping the market external roofing, we chose to make a connection to Berea Station tracks in order that the Rail-Bus is more accessible. On the contrary, we think that the cemetery should be kept separated from the market. It consists of a filter area that assemble the ribbon with a green edge in order to make the cohabitation of such different contrasting realities.

ADVANTAGE FOR MARKET

ADVANTAGE FOR CEMETERY

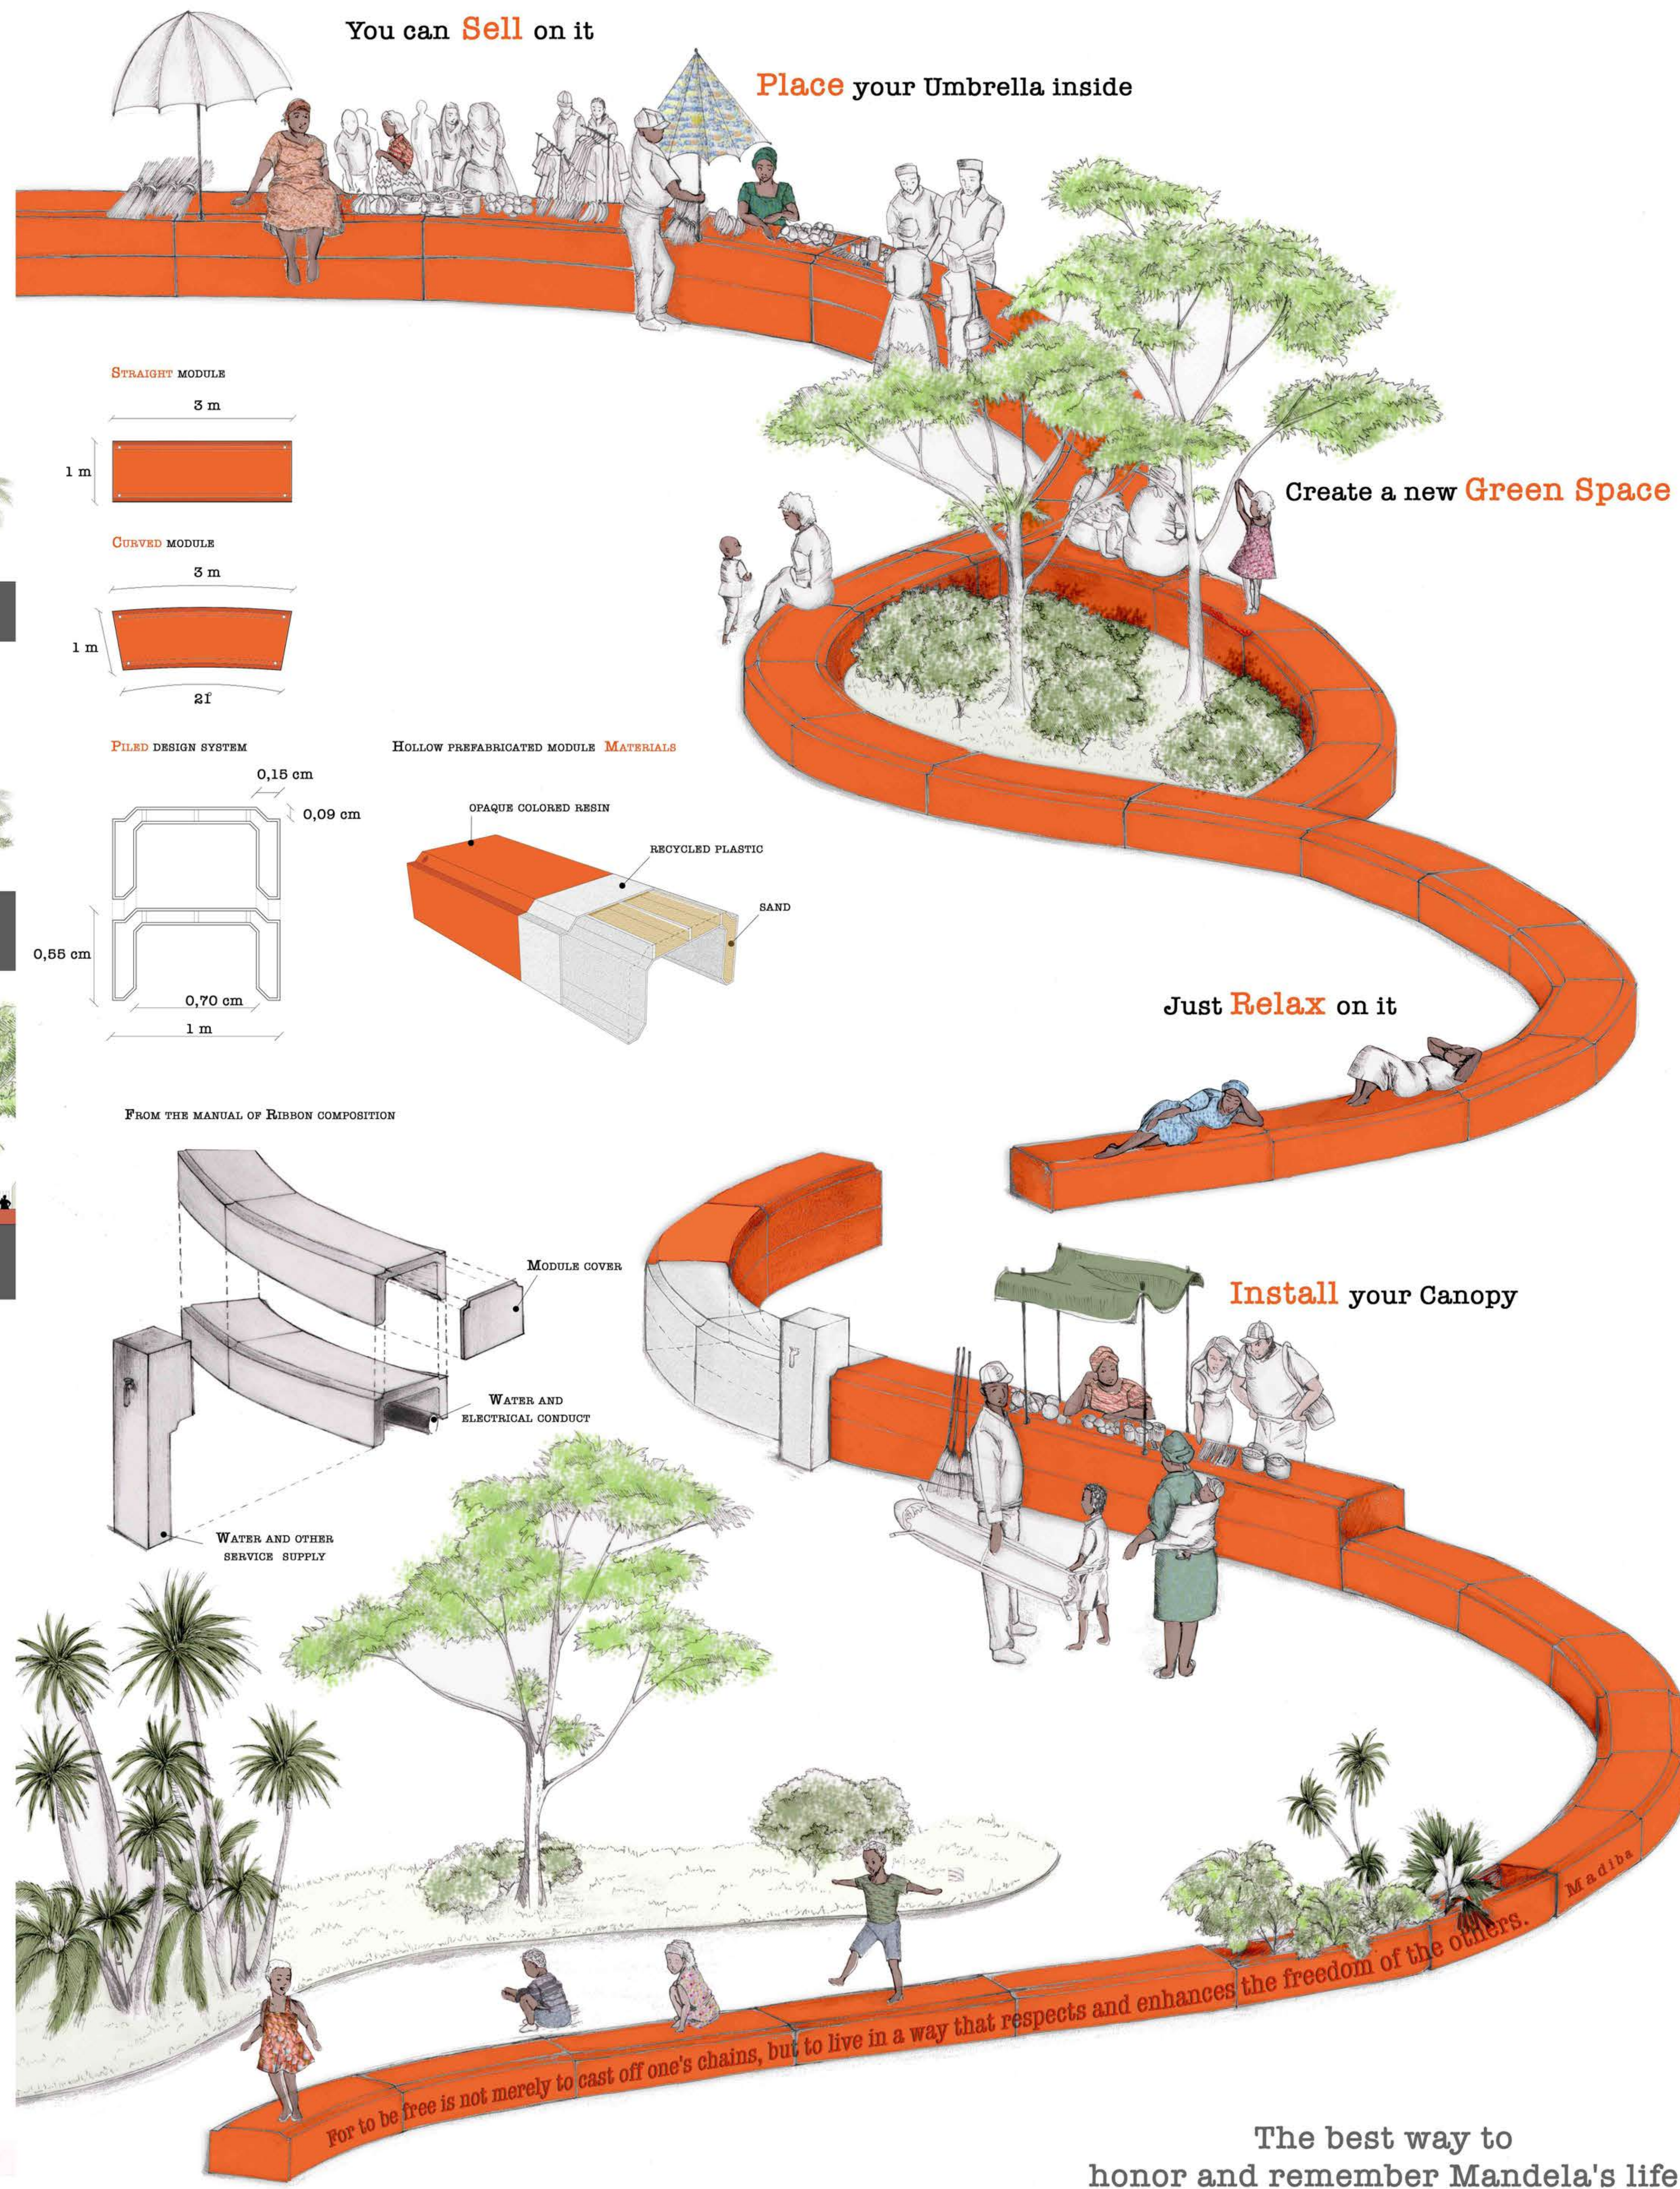

Although we do not change anything of the cemetery structure, as a consequence there is a different perception inside it. We aim at respecting and enhancing the cemetery spirituality for it is not only a place where different religions meet but it is "...that place where man and nature are in closest harmony in the city"

Ian McHarg (The place of nature in the city of man, 1964).

You can Sell on it

Place your Umbrella inside

Children will Enjoy with it
